

From the CEO

Almost two years ago, construction began on 41X. But, as many of you know, the project's inception dates back to 2006, when National Council commissioned a detailed feasibility study for the site, encompassing a range of potential options for its future.

Re-Casting terra nullius blindness: Empowering Indigenous Protocols and Knowledge in Australian University Built Environment Education

Recent events in Australian history have heightened recognition of the rights, interests, needs and aspirations of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in Australia and internationally. Despite this, little has changed in Australian planning and design education and practice (architecture, planning and landscape architecture) to integrate a better understanding of the need for engagement with indigenous knowledge and cultural systems and relevant protocols, as distinct from cultural competency articulation.
