

Playing with Rain

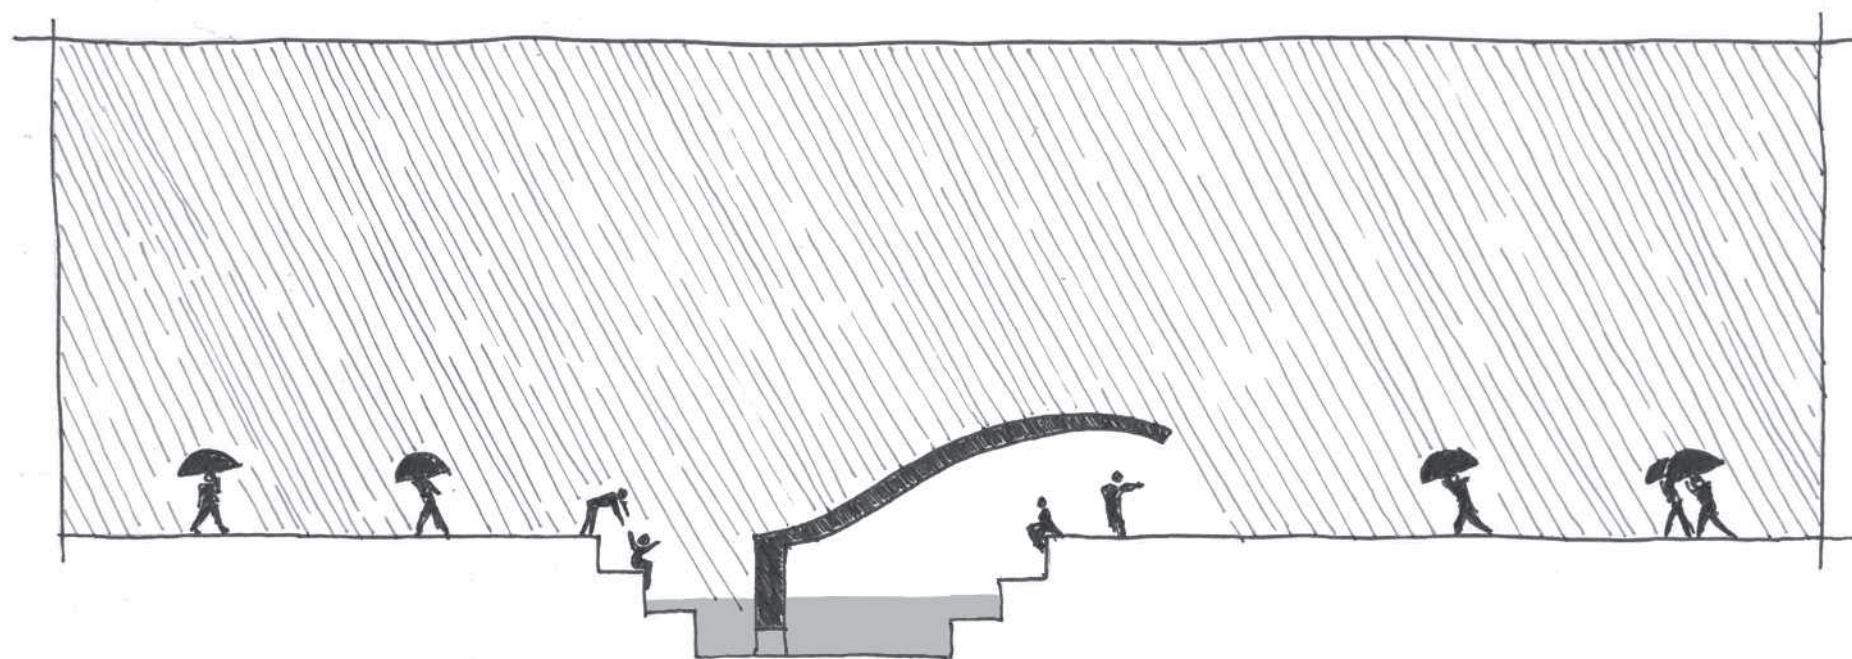

Hi P,

That's super to hear!

We've been thinking a lot about what you've said, about how people don't interact with rain anymore, we hide from it and avoid it.

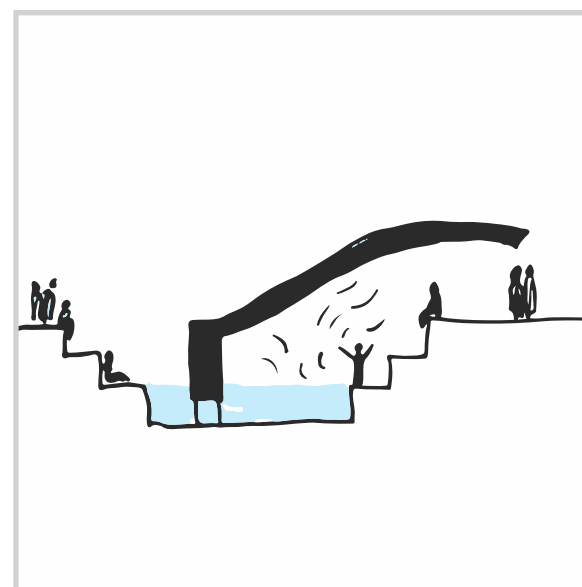

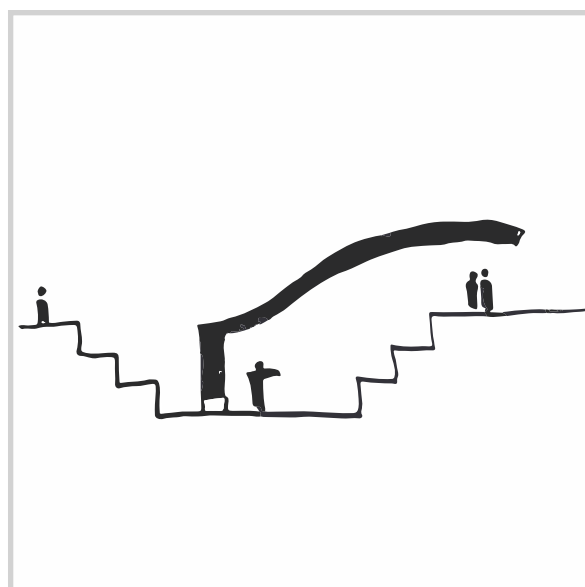

Have a look at what we've attached, some proposals for the site. We hope this can be the gift to the public that you were dreaming of.

S.

This proposal utilises an existing public space and transforms it into an intervention that is activated by water.

During a downpour, the space is transformed.

A downpour is a temporary event.

This proposal provides a space for shelter, a space for conversations, and a space for play.

Water runs down the roof and fills it up internally, dramatically changing the look and the acoustics.

To see the intervention from afar highlights the liquid texture, the physical qualities of rain, as it interacts with the outer shell.
